GREGORY GYMNASIUM

THE HORNS' HOUSE - Gregory Gymnasium has been home to Texas Volleyball for nearly three decades and has hosted some of the most memorable moments in Longhorns history. Named for Thomas Watt Gregory, an 1885 University of Texas law graduate and former university regent, Gregory Gym opened in 1930 as part of the university's Union Project, which also included the Texas Union, a women's gymnasium and an auditorium. Gregory was instrumental in the effort to establish a permanent gymnasium on campus, helping lead fundraising efforts for the project.

When Gregory Gym opened, it served as a home for Texas basketball while also hosting class registration, dances, lectures, concerts, physical education classes and intramural sports. The building underwent a major eight-year renovation in the 1990s before returning as the home of Texas Volleyball in 1998.

The Gregory has developed a reputation as one of the nation's most distinctive home-court environments. The intimate, 4,000-seat facility puts fans directly on top of the action, while generations of Texas supporters and the student-led Hellraisers have helped create an atmosphere that makes Gregory one of volleyball's toughest venues for visiting teams.

Texas has an all-time .877 winning percentage at Gregory Gym (476-67), establishing one of the strongest home-court records in the country. The Longhorns have also consistently ranked among the nation's attendance leaders, including a program-record average of 4,495 fans per match in 2023. Texas sold out all 16 of its home matches that season after finishing 2022 with 12 consecutive sellouts at Gregory Gym.

Gregory Gym has also produced some of the largest crowds in Texas Volleyball history. The facility attendance record of 5,344 fans was set during the 2022 NCAA Regional Final against Ohio State.

The building's intimate design remains a defining part of the experience. Upper-level seating puts fans directly above the court, while floor-level seating features chair backs for comfortable viewing. The facility's renovation and subsequent improvements added spacious locker rooms, offices, meeting rooms and a players' lounge, along with updates to the playing surface and sound system.

Gregory Gym has been the setting for generations of Texas Volleyball, from the program's return to the building in 1998 through multiple conference championships and NCAA postseason runs. With its history, intimate setting, passionate fan base and proven home-court advantage, The Horns' House remains one of the signature venues in college volleyball.
